

The Opening of Nottingham's Victorian Town Trail

1:00pm on Sunday 26th September from the south end of Queen's Walk by the Embankment tram stop.

In the 18th century Nottingham was a fashionable, elegant town however due to a combination of urbanisation, movement of people off the land, industrialisation, and population growth, the number of people in the town increased from 10,910 in 1750 to 28,861 in 1800 and by 1831 it had reached 50,220. The upper classes moved out of the town centre which became increasingly populated by the working class. All the available space within the town boundaries was intensively developed which resulted in the creation of cheap, poorly designed, overcrowded housing with poor sanitation.

Historically the town boundaries were surrounded by open 'Common Land' to the north-west (the Sand Field), the north-east (the Clay Field) and the south, between the Rivers Leen and Trent (the Meadows). The obvious solution was to develop this open land through the process of Enclosure, but the Town Corporation was persistently against it and so it remained until the implementation of the Municipal Reform Act of 1835 which changed the way that councils were elected.

On June 30th, 1845, an Act to enclose the Fields and Wastes of Nottingham, St. Mary's Parish, was given the Royal Assent. The Act would allow the town to build out over the fields in all directions, but it was not actually implemented until 1865, which must suggest the number and complexity of the different issues involved.

One benefit of this process was the allocation of 130 acres of land for the use of the public for recreation. The open fields around Nottingham had given the townspeople space for walks and games in the fresh air, and now it was seen to be necessary to keep something of this facility despite the building that was about to take place. The plan was to create a circle of walks around the town, linked to local parks and including a few cricket grounds. This was subsequently amended to include an arboretum but to reduce the extent of the walks. Some land was also to be used to expand the General Cemetery and the Rock Cemetery.

When The Friends of the Forest was set up in 2001 there was little appreciation of how important the 1845 Act had been in maintaining open space as a source of fresh air and recreation for the people of Nottingham. The Friends set about establishing an itinerary and created a free public event to show and explain this land, its heritage, and its purpose. For the past 17 years June Perry and The Friends of the Forest have been conducting an annual guided walk which takes in Queens Walk, Queens Walk Recreation Ground, Victoria Park, Robin Hood Chase, Corporation Oaks, St. Ann's Hill (round Belle Vue Reservoir), Elm Avenue, The Arboretum, Waterloo Promenade, and The Forest. The walk also includes parts of the General and the Rock Cemeteries, both of which provide the pleasures of a park with their winding paths over hilly landscapes, richly populated with trees and fascinating monuments. This year the walk has been made into a Town Trail marked with information boards to help follow the 5-mile route and Kate Ashbrook, General Secretary of the Open Spaces Society, will formally open The Trail and start the walk at 1:00pm on Sunday 26th September from the south end of Queen's Walk by the Embankment tram stop.

The walk takes a leisurely pace and includes brief historical chats along the way. It is suitable for powered wheelchairs. It finishes at the Inclosure Oak at the Lodge end of The Forest.

Please join in supporting the Inclosure Walk and Nottingham's green spaces.
