

Working together: what we do best

Volume 2, Issue 2, October 2015

Hello

I'm using this format for the newsletter because it forms part of the WordPress system that I use for putting events and news items onto our webpages. In effect news and events need only to be posted once to the webpage and then they can be inserted directly into the newsletter. All that is required is a little editing and a little tidying up, resulting in a significant saving in time and manpower. The newsletter will print from your email system but, like all emails, it will also print the From:, Subject:, Date:, and To: information at the top of the first page. It is really designed to be opened and read from a web browser. You can print the newsletter directly from your web browser in exactly the same way that you would print any web page.

Because it is designed to be a web based system there is also the facility to link back to the original source document on the website (that's what the Read More 'tabs' do for you). I appreciate that not everyone wants to work from a web browser and also once you have printed the newsletter out these tabs do nothing for you. So in order to make the newsletter readable as a stand-alone document I have included most of the short articles in their entirety. With longer articles and particularly articles which contain a lot of pictures I have decided that it would be better not to try and do that as it would involve effectively vandalising the article to make it fit into the newsletter - the Thoresby Colliery article and the Stanford-on-Soar article are both available in full on the website and can be accessed from your web browser by using the Read More tab, or you can go onto the website at www.nlha.org.uk and have a look at 'News'.

All of the Local Society events have a Read More tab but I have rewritten the text associated with each event so that the key details actually appear in the newsletter without you having to go to the webpage. The Read More tab will work from your browser and take you to the relevant event on the web page but other than the address details for the event and a Google map there is not much else to see.

If anyone has any news, events or ideas for the newsletter or the website (or anything else for that matter) please contact me at chairman@nlha.org.uk.

Thank you for your support.

John.

NLHA Autumn Dayschool 24th October 2015

Our theme for this event was "An Archaeological Miscellany" and we began the day with a presentation by Emily Gillott and Lorraine Horsley from Community Archaeology at Nottinghamshire County Council on the Roman settlement at Segelocum. Although there is little to see at the site which is now the hamlet of Littleborough Emily and Lorraine used crop marks, pottery finds, funerary evidence and old maps to question how and why this large 'small Roman town' happened to be there and why it was probably the most important Roman Town in Nottinghamshire.

David Budge from Mercian Archaeology talked about the importance of 'finds' as archaeological evidence with particular reference to determining the date of an object through using fashion, technology and scientific research but warned strongly about relying on the dates on coins.

Rob Smith gave a short presentation on the research that led to the re-publication of Doris Stirk's book 'The Southwell Settlers' which tells the story of how a settlement called Southwell was established in the East Cape region of South Africa by English settlers, some of whom came from Arnold. The book, which was published with the support of funding from NLHA, was on sale over the lunch break.

After lunch LilyAnn Dawes gave an entertaining talk on dead bodies, or rather what evidence could be gleaned from the examination of bodies and bones using a not-very-dead member of the audience as a demonstration; and why mens' jeans don't fit when worn by women.

Matt Beresford from MB Archaeology rounded off the day with a talk on the archaeological work carried out at Southwell and at Elmton. Matt also provided a sample of 'Roman Southwell Gladiator' bottled beer for sale to aid the funding of ongoing work at Southwell.

Those of you who attended the DaySchool will be aware that we had a bit of a medical incident at about 3:00 o'clock. The good news is that the gentleman involved is now feeling much better.

Angel Row Historyfest

In May 2012, Nottinghamshire Local History Association's Angel Row Forum began a revival of sorts with a history fair in Nottingham Central Library with the support of Nottingham Local Studies Library. Both NLHA and the Library were pioneering partners back in the 1980s when a series of regional history fairs were organised and led by Sheila Cooke, the then City Local Studies Librarian, and Kate Thompson, the then Leicestershire County Archivist. Dorothy Ritchie, who has just retired from Nottingham Local Studies Library after nearly fifty years, and I were involved in the first fairs and we thought it time for a revival of sorts. You can find a report of the 2012 Fair on this website on another page.

In 2013, the History Fair was reprised by County Libraries in Mansfield Library and again in 2014 and 2015. There have also been two history fairs at Lakeside on Nottingham University's main campus, and a year ago, Dorothy and I decided we would like to organise one final history fair in Nottingham Central Library, which we decided to call a 'Historyfest', before handing over to others — hence the Angel Row Historyfest in Nottingham Central Library on Saturday 10 October 2015. Dorothy ended up retiring a few months ago and her colleague, Nicola Holmes, took over working with me and my NLHA colleague, Jenny Page, who, when the Historyfest ended, took over from me as NLHA's Angel Row History Forum Organiser.

Last year, on reaching 70, I decided no more committees and this year I resolved no more organising anything after the Historyfest. Central Library's Nicola and her colleague Kay have been fantastic to work with and really helped to make the 2015 Angel Row Historyfest a great day. There will be pics on the NLHA FaceBook page over the coming days and a full report in the next issue of The Nottinghamshire Historian.

Books

Supported by the
NLHA Publishing
Fund

NLHA has set aside funding specifically to help members and member societies publish their research work in local history. Funds of up to £200 can be provided on the basis of a grant, not a loan, subject only to the condition that NLHA's contribution must be fully acknowledged within the publication and wherever the publication is advertised. We would expect the applicant to provide a copy (or significant extract for larger publications) for consideration and we reserve the right to reject applications where the standard of the work, the content or the presentation would harm the reputation of NLHA. Publications must relate to the general theme of Nottinghamshire local history.

EDWINSTOWE 1890-1900s by Margaret Woodhead. This is the third volume of the history of Edwinstowe by the author of The People of Edwinstowe - The Dead End of the Village and The Coming of Coal. This generously illustrated volume covers a decade of rapid change which saw the coming of the L.D. & E.C. Railway and the opening of the ambitious Dukeries Hotel built by Mansfield Breweries to cater for the large numbers of day trippers from nearby cities visiting the Major Oak or touring the Dukeries Estates. At the same time as Earl Manvers opened a pioneering Co-Operative store for the village women were agitating for the vote in the newly established Parish Council elections and all the plaster was stripped from the walls of St. Mary's Church.

Octogenarian local historian Margaret Woodhead presents a fascinating miscellany, drawing on newspaper reports, letters and documents from local archives and photographs from the Society's collection. The 44 page book is available from Edwinstowe Historical Society for £4.00 plus £1.50 package and postage. Cheques made payable to Edwinstowe Historical Society should be sent to E Stewart-Smith, 3 St Mary's Drive, Edwinstowe, Mansfield, NG21 9LY
